is not a model that's going to provide the answer. What it's going to do is provide help in analyzing. I might point out on that blue sheet that Senator Wesely passed out that shows what we net or lose and the time frame, I believe, Senator Wesely, that that is only state government, and there is no impact or on that chart it shows the impact on local governments, which can be equally as significant, if not more so. And the intent of this model is to take that into account, too. If you read one of the reports, the things for local government, what is suggested in the discussion paper of the review, when it comes to local government if you have a lot of unused capacity at the local level, the streets, the schools, water and sewers, there may be relatively small impact. On the other hand if you do not have unused capacity and if your growth is particularly households with children of school age, it could become very questionable if you are going to have a substantial fiscal benefit. The need to help both local and state governments to analyze those issues and then make a policy judgment, I think, is important. And I would hope that this bill at least will assist in providing future elected representatives to make that kind of analysis better than we can now. With that, I'd ask the bill be advanced.
